Q1: Write down the rule of livelihood in islam.

In Islam, there are several principles and rules regarding livelihood and earning a living that Muslims are expected to follow. These guidelines are based on the Quran (the holy book of Islam) and the Hadith (the sayings and actions of the Prophet Muhammad). Here are some key principles:

1. Halal and Haram: Muslims are encouraged to earn their livelihood through lawful (halal) means and avoid unlawful (haram) sources of income. Halal income includes wages, profits from ethical businesses, investments in permissible ventures, and lawful trade. Haram income, on the other hand, includes earnings from activities like gambling, interest-based transactions (usury), selling or consuming alcohol and pork, and any form of dishonest or exploitative business practices.

2. Honesty and Integrity: Islam emphasizes honesty and integrity in all financial dealings. Muslims are encouraged to be truthful, transparent, and fair in their business transactions and financial matters. Deception, fraud, and any form of cheating are strictly prohibited.

3. Hard Work and Effort: Islam encourages hard work and the pursuit of excellence in one's profession or occupation. The Prophet Muhammad said that earning a living through one's own labor is an honorable and dignified act.

4. Seeking Blessings in Work: Muslims are encouraged to start their work or business endeavors with a prayer (dua) and the intention of seeking Allah's blessings and guidance. They should also be grateful for what they have and recognize that their livelihood ultimately comes from God.

5. Avoiding Riba (Usury/Interest): Islam strictly prohibits engaging in transactions that involve usury (riba). Earning interest from loans or investments in interest-based financial instruments is considered haram.

6. Charity (Zakat and Sadaqah): Muslims are encouraged to give a portion of their income to charity. Zakat is a mandatory form of almsgiving, calculated as a percentage of a person's savings and assets, while sadaqah is voluntary charity. Giving to those in need is seen as a way to purify one's wealth and help those less fortunate.

7. Avoiding Unlawful Profits: Muslims should refrain from earning money through illegal or unethical means, such as theft, bribery, or any form of oppression.

8. Financial Responsibility: Muslims are expected to manage their finances responsibly, avoid extravagance, and live within their means. Excessive spending and debt are discouraged.

9. Supporting Family: It is the duty of a Muslim to provide for their family's basic needs, and this responsibility is especially emphasized for husbands and fathers.

10. Balancing Material and Spiritual Life: While earning a livelihood is important, Muslims are reminded to strike a balance between their material and spiritual lives. They should not become overly preoccupied with wealth and worldly pursuits, but instead, prioritize their relationship with God and their duties towards others.

Q2: The name of the days and months in arabic.

In the Arabic language, the names of the days of the week and months of the year are as follows:

11. ال قعدة ذو (Dhu al-Qi'dah) - Eleventh month of the Islamic lunar calendar
12. ال حجة ذو (Dhu al-Hijjah) - Twelfth month of the Islamic lunar calendar, the month of Hajj pilgrimage

Q3: Explain the transition of human life from this world to the hereafter.

In Islamic belief, the transition of human life from this world to the hereafter is a fundamental aspect of faith and a central part of the Islamic understanding of the afterlife. Here is an explanation of this transition, as understood in Islam:

1. Death: The first step in the transition from this world to the hereafter is the moment of death. Death is viewed as a natural and inevitable part of human existence. When a person's time comes, their soul is separated from their physical body. The Quran, the holy book of Islam, describes death as the return of the soul to its Creator: "To Allah we belong, and to Him is our return." (Quran 2:156)

2. Barzakh (Intermediary Realm): After death, the soul enters a state known as Barzakh. This is considered an intermediary realm, a transitional state between this life and the hereafter. In Barzakh, the soul is believed to experience the consequences of its earthly deeds. It is a state of waiting until the Day of Judgment.

3. Resurrection: On the Day of Judgment (Yawm al-Qiyamah), which is a central concept in Islamic eschatology, all human beings are resurrected from their graves. This is the day when everyone will be held accountable for their actions in this world. The Quran describes this event in detail, stating that individuals will be presented with a record of their deeds, which will be weighed to determine their fate.

4. Judgment: During the Day of Judgment, individuals are judged by Allah (God) based on their faith, actions, and intentions in this world. The judgment is based on justice and mercy. Those who lived righteous lives and believed in God's oneness will be rewarded with eternal paradise (Jannah), while those who rejected God's guidance and lived in disobedience may face punishment in hell (Jahannam). The Quran describes vividly the descriptions of heaven and hell.

5. Eternal Life: After the Day of Judgment, individuals will enter their eternal abode, whether it be paradise or hell. In Islamic belief, the soul continues to exist in the hereafter, and there is no concept of reincarnation. The nature of life in the hereafter is eternal and beyond human comprehension.

6. Accountability: Islam emphasizes the concept of individual accountability, meaning that every person is responsible for their own deeds and will be judged accordingly. No one will bear the burden of another's sins, and no one can intercede on behalf of another without God's permission.

Q4: Explain the Arabic interrogative pronoun with example.

Arabic, like many languages, uses interrogative pronouns to ask questions and seek information. Interrogative pronouns are used to introduce questions and often correspond to English words like "who," "what," "where," "when," "why," and "how." In Arabic, these pronouns can vary based on gender and number. Here are some Arabic interrogative pronouns with examples:

1. مَنْ (man): This interrogative pronoun is equivalent to the English "who" or "whom" and is used to ask about people.

- مَنْ هَذَا؟ (Man hadha?) - Who is this?

- إِلَى مَنِ ذَهَبَ؟ (Man thahaba ila al-madrasah?) - Who went to school?

2. مَا (ma): This interrogative pronoun is similar to the English "what" and is used to ask about things or actions.

- مَا هَذَا؟ (Ma hadha?) - What is this?

- مَاذَا تَفْعَلُ؟ (Mada taf'al?) - What are you doing?

3. أَيْنَ (ayn): This interrogative pronoun corresponds to "where" in English and is used to inquire about locations.

- أَيْنَ الْمَطْعَمُ؟ (Ayna al-mat'am?) - Where is the restaurant?

- أَيْنَ ذَهَبَتِ السَّيَّارَةُ؟ (Ayna thahabat as-sayara?) - Where did the car go?

4. مَتَى (mata): This interrogative pronoun means "when" and is used to ask about time or the timing of an event.

- مَتَى تَذْهَبُ إِلَى الْمَدْرَسَةِ؟ (Mata satathhab ila al-madrasah?) - When will you go to school?

- متى بدأ الاجتماع؟ (Mata bada al-ijtima') - When did the meeting start?

5. لِمَ (lima): This interrogative pronoun is similar to "why" in English and is used to inquire about the reason or cause of something.

- الى ذهب لم؟ (Lima thahaba ila al-madrasah?) - Why did he go to school?

- لماذا لا تأكل لم؟ (Lima ta'kul hadha at-ta'am?) - Why are you not eating this food?

6. كَيْفَ (kayfa): This interrogative pronoun means "how" and is used to ask about the manner or method of doing something.

- كيف تكتب هذا؟ (Kayfa taktabu hadha?) - How do you write this?

- كيف يعمل هذا الجهاز؟ (Kayfa ya'mal hadha al-jihaz?) - How does this device work?

These Arabic interrogative pronouns are essential for constructing questions and seeking information in Arabic conversations. They help express the "who," "what," "where," "when," "why," and "how" of various situations.

Q5: The rule of interest in Islam and its impact in society.

In Islam, the charging or payment of interest, also known as usury or riba, is strictly prohibited. The prohibition of riba is a fundamental principle of Islamic finance and is rooted in the Quran, the holy book of Islam, and the Hadith, which are the sayings and actions of the Prophet Muhammad. The rule against interest in Islam has several important implications and impacts on society:

1. Prohibition of Riba (Usury): Riba is seen as unjust and exploitative, and it is forbidden in all forms, whether it's charging interest on loans, investments, or financial transactions. The primary reasons for this prohibition are to ensure fairness, eliminate economic exploitation, and uphold social justice.

2. Economic Justice: The prohibition of riba aligns with the principles of economic justice in Islam. It aims to prevent the concentration of wealth in the hands of a few, as excessive interest charges can lead to financial inequality and exploitation of the less fortunate.

3. Encouragement of Ethical Finance: Islamic finance promotes ethical financial practices, emphasizing profit and risk-sharing rather than guaranteed interest. This encourages investments in productive and tangible assets rather than speculative activities or predatory lending.

4. Promotes Shared Risk: In Islamic finance, partnerships and profit-sharing arrangements are common, encouraging individuals and institutions to share in both profits and losses. This approach fosters a sense of shared responsibility and encourages economic stability.

5. Social Welfare: By prohibiting riba and promoting economic justice, Islamic finance supports social welfare and the welfare of the community. This aligns with the concept of zakat (obligatory almsgiving) and sadaqah (voluntary charity) to help those in need.

6. Encourages Real Economic Growth: The avoidance of interest-based transactions can lead to more sustainable and equitable economic growth. Instead of relying on debt, individuals and businesses are encouraged to invest in real economic activities.

7. Challenges in Implementation: While the prohibition of interest is a fundamental principle, it can be challenging to implement in the modern financial world. Many financial systems and institutions are based on interest, and reconciling Islamic finance principles with global financial practices can be complex.

8. Development of Islamic Finance: The rule against interest has led to the growth of Islamic finance institutions and products. These institutions provide Sharia-compliant financial services, including banking, insurance, and investment, that adhere to Islamic principles.

In summary, the rule against interest in Islam is intended to promote economic justice, ethical finance, and social welfare. It aims to create a financial system that is fair, equitable, and supportive of shared risk and prosperity. The impact of this rule on society includes the development of Islamic finance and the promotion of ethical financial practices. However, challenges exist in implementing these principles in a global financial system that predominantly relies on interest-based transactions.

Q6: The name of direction in Arabic.

In Arabic, the names of the cardinal directions are as follows:

1. شمال ال (Ash-Shamāl) - North
2. الجنوب (Al-Janūb) - South
3. الشرق (Ash-Sharq) - East
4. الغرب (Al-Gharb) - West

These terms are used to describe the four main compass directions in Arabic, just as they are in many other languages.

Q7: The rules of drug and gambling in Islam and this impact in society.

In Islam, there are clear rules and prohibitions regarding drug use and gambling, and these rules have significant impacts on individuals and society. Let's examine these rules and their implications:

Rules on Drug Use (Narcotics):

- 1. Prohibition of Intoxicants: The Quran explicitly prohibits the consumption of intoxicants, including alcohol and any substances that impair one's judgment or consciousness. The consumption of such substances is considered haram (forbidden).
- 2. Health and Well-being: Islam places a strong emphasis on maintaining one's health and well-being. The use of drugs can have harmful physical, psychological, and social consequences, which contradict these principles.
- 3. Responsibility and Accountability: Individuals are responsible for their actions, and the use of drugs can lead to irresponsible behavior, harm to others, and a lack of accountability. Islam encourages personal responsibility and accountability in one's actions.

Impact on Society:

- 1. Public Health: Prohibiting drug use aligns with the promotion of public health and well-being. By discouraging drug use, society can work towards reducing the negative health consequences associated with drug addiction.
- 2. Reducing Crime: Many crimes are associated with drug abuse, including theft, violence, and drug-related offenses. By discouraging drug use, societies can work to reduce crime rates and improve overall safety.
- 3. Strengthening Social Fabric: Drug addiction can lead to broken families and strained social relationships. By discouraging drug use, Islamic principles seek to strengthen the social fabric of communities and promote family cohesion.

Rules on Gambling:

- 1. Prohibition of Gambling (Maisir): The Quran also explicitly prohibits gambling or any form of games of chance. Gambling is considered haram in Islam, as it is seen as a means of obtaining money without working for it.
- 2. Economic Justice: Islam promotes economic justice, and gambling is viewed as an activity that fosters unfairness and economic inequality. Those who suffer from gambling-related losses often experience financial hardships.

Impact on Society:

1. Economic Stability: The prohibition of gambling is aimed at promoting economic stability and justice. By avoiding the harmful consequences of gambling, societies can maintain a more stable and equitable economic environment.

2. Reducing Social Problems: Gambling addiction can lead to financial ruin, family breakdown, and other social problems. By prohibiting gambling, Islamic principles aim to reduce these negative social consequences.

3. Encouraging Productivity: Islam encourages individuals to earn a living through honest labor and effort. Prohibiting gambling serves as a reminder to seek productive means of income and financial security.

Q8: Explain the type of Arabic word with example.

Explanation of types of Arabic words with examples:

1. Nouns (Ism/اسم): Nouns represent people, places, things, or concepts. In Arabic, they can be proper nouns (specific entities) or common nouns (general things or ideas).

- Proper Noun: محمد (Muhammad) - the name "Muhammad."

- Common Noun: بيت (bayt) - "house."

2. Verbs (Fi'l/فعل): Verbs indicate actions or states. Arabic verbs are conjugated according to various tenses, moods, and persons.

- Verb Example: كتب (kataba) - "he wrote."

3. Pronouns (Dhameer/ضمير): Pronouns replace nouns to avoid repetition. They include personal pronouns, possessive pronouns, and others.

- Personal Pronoun: هو (huwa) - "he."

- Possessive Pronoun: كتابي (kitaabi) - "my book."

4. Adjectives (Sifah/صفة): Adjectives modify nouns and agree in gender and number with the nouns they describe.

- Adjective Example: جميل (jameel) - "beautiful."

5. Adverbs (Zarf/ظرف): Adverbs modify verbs, adjectives, or other adverbs to indicate time, place, manner, or degree.

- Adverb Example: بسرعة (bisuraa'a) - "quickly."

6. Prepositions (Huroof Jar/حروف): Prepositions show the relationship between nouns and other words in a sentence, indicating location, direction, time, and more.

- Preposition Example: في (fi) - "in" or "at."

7. Conjunctions (Aharf Atf/عطف أحرف): Conjunctions connect words, phrases, or clauses in a sentence, including coordinating and subordinating conjunctions.

- Coordinating Conjunction: و (wa) - "and."

- Subordinating Conjunction: إذا (idha) - "if."

8. Articles (Al-Artikl/ال تعريف): The definite article "ال" (al) is used before nouns to indicate definiteness.

- Definite Article Example: الكتاب (al-kitab) - "the book."

9. Particles (Harf/حرف): Particles are small words with grammatical functions, including negation particles and question particles.

- Negation Particle: لا (laa) - "no" or "not."

- Question Particle: هل (hal) - used in yes/no questions.

10. Interjections (Intidhaat/إنفاضة): Interjections express strong emotions and often appear at the beginning or end of a sentence.

- Interjection Example: يا لها من فرحة! (Ya laha min farah!) - "What a joy!"

These are the main types of Arabic words. The Arabic language is known for its intricate grammar and rich vocabulary, making it a fascinating language to study.

Q9: The rules and ethical direction of marriage mehr and veil(hijab) in Islam.

Certainly, here's a more detailed explanation of the rules and ethical aspects of marriage mehr and the veil in Islam:

Marriage Mehr (Dower): Mehr, also known as "Mahr" or "Mahar," is a fundamental component of Islamic marriage contracts. It is a financial obligation that a husband undertakes to provide a gift or dowry to his wife. The payment of mehr is a symbol of the husband's commitment to his wife and his responsibility to financially support her. It serves several important purposes:

- Symbol of Commitment: Mehr signifies the husband's commitment to provide for his wife and fulfill her financial needs within the marital relationship.

- Financial Security: Mehr provides a level of financial security for the wife. In the event of divorce or the husband's death, the mehr amount is her right and can serve as a form of financial protection.

- Dignity and Respect: Mehr is a means of honoring and respecting the wife. It underscores her worth and value within the marriage.

- Legal Requirement: In many Islamic countries, the payment of mehr is a legal requirement for the validity of a marriage contract, emphasizing its significance in Islamic law.

The amount of mehr is usually agreed upon and specified in the marriage contract, and it can take various forms, including material possessions, cash, or property. The Quran emphasizes the importance of granting women their bridal gifts graciously, and it also allows them the option to willingly give up a portion of it (Quran 4:4).

Veil (Hijab): The hijab refers to the modest dress code and covering that Muslim women are encouraged to observe, particularly in the presence of non-mahram (non-relative) men. The hijab is a key element of Islamic ethics and is designed to maintain modesty, privacy, and dignity. It typically includes the following components:

- Head Covering: Muslim women are often encouraged to wear a headscarf, referred to as a "hijab," which covers their hair and neck.

- Modest Clothing: Women are advised to wear loose-fitting clothing that conceals the shape of their bodies.

- Face Veil (Niqab): In some interpretations of Islamic ethics, a face veil (niqab) is worn to cover the face, except for the eyes.

The hijab is primarily intended to protect a woman's honor, ensuring that her beauty and physical appearance are reserved for her husband and close family. The requirement for the hijab is derived from various sources in Islamic jurisprudence, including Quranic verses and Hadiths (sayings and actions of the Prophet Muhammad).
